Restorative Justice Writing Opportunity

Have you studied or been involved in Restorative Justice while incarcerated? If so, you are invited to participate in the creation of a book about Restorative Justice from the perspective of the incarcerated called Restorative Justice From the Inside Out; Incarcerated practitioners and theorists write about restorative justice.

The book is aimed at bringing incarcerated voices to the forefront of criminal justice reform discourse by soliciting prisoner perspectives on restorative justice and its meaning and application in prison as well as throughout the various phases of their interaction with the justice system. The Editors are putting an open call out for chapter submissions from any prisoner who has participated in a restorative justice based program or encounter throughout their time within the justice system or has studied restorative justice. For the purpose of this volume, a restorative justice program or encounter is defined as any program or encounter that sought to highlight the needs or voices of victim/survivors, allowed for and encouraged increased accountability, and/or asked people to explore the impact of crime.

If you are interested in making a submission or being involved, please kyte your chaplain's office or Kelly Rath at the Dome Building for a packet with information and submission guidelines.
